Know the difference between they're, their, and there.

They're, their, and there are three very common words in English. Because they occur so often in a piece of writing, you must choose the correct form. Otherwise, you will indicate to your reader that you cannot control simple, everyday words. Here are the differences:

THEY'RE

They're is a contraction for they are. If you cannot substitute they are in the sentence and have it make sense, you are using the wrong word.

After their long run in the hot sun, the dogs are in the kitch en where they're stretched out on the cool tiles.

Since they are stretched out makes perfect sense, you know the contraction is correct.

Tueld

Their is the possessive pronoun that means belonging to them. You use this form to indicate ownership.

My neigh bors are always complaining about the He inmillers because their we edy lawn and barking dogs ruin the beauty and peace of the street.

The lawn and dogs belong to them, the Heinmillers, so the possessive pronoun is correct.

THERE

There can indicate location or be used as an expletive, an often unnecessary filler word that delays the subject.

There sits Grandpa, dozing in front of a base ball game.

In this sentence, there indicates location. Compare it to this one:

There are honeyb ees buzzing around He len's just -sh ampooed hair.

Honeybees, the subject, is delayed because there comes before the verb, in the place where the subject usually exists.

If you cannot decide which form to use, go through the following elimination process:

QUESTI ON 1 — DO I NE ED TH EY'RE?

If you think you might need they're, substitute they are in the sentence. Does the sentence still make sense? If it does, you have the correct form. Read this example:

The twe nty-five computers hum in the lab as if they're a ch urch ch oir warming up to sing.

As if they are a church choir? Yes! They're is thus correct. Now read this sentence:

Gilda and Shaunda spent all evening memorizing the names of human bones, so they feel ready to take they're anatomy and physi ology quiz.

They feel ready to take they are anatomy and physiology quiz? Of course not! That sentence makes no sense. You must choose another form, in this case their.

QUESTI ON 2 - DO I NE ED TH EIR?

If you have chosen their for the sentence, you must be showing ownership. Look at the word that follows their. Is it something possessed by them? If the answer is yes, you have the correct form. Look at this sentence:

When my cat Ro cky leave s the house, the squirrels must dash to the safety of a nearby tree, their tails sn apping in frust ration.

Do the tails belong to them, the squirrels? Yes! Their is thus the correct form. Now read this example:

Ri ch ard buys broke n appliance s at yard sa les with the go od intentions of repairing them. Their still sitting in his ga rage, which drive s his wife Sue crazy.

Can the word still belong to them, the appliances? Of course not! Still is an adverb that cannot be possessed by anything. You must choose another form, in this case they're.

QUESTI ON 3 - DO I NE ED TH ERE?

If you cannot substitute they are and have the sentence make sense, and if you are not showing ownership, then you need your last option, there. Keep in mind, however, that many times you can eliminate there altogether. Here is a sample sentence:

There we re so many students crowding the cafete ria that poor LuAn ne gave up buying a greasy burger before her next class.

Although this sentence uses the right word, the there is unnecessary. A tighter sentence reads like this:

So many students crowd ed the cafeteria that poor Lu Anne gave up buying a greasy burge r before her next class.

QUICK TEST

Directions: Correct any problems you find with they're, their, and there.
